

Memories

by Marie Camp
(1937)

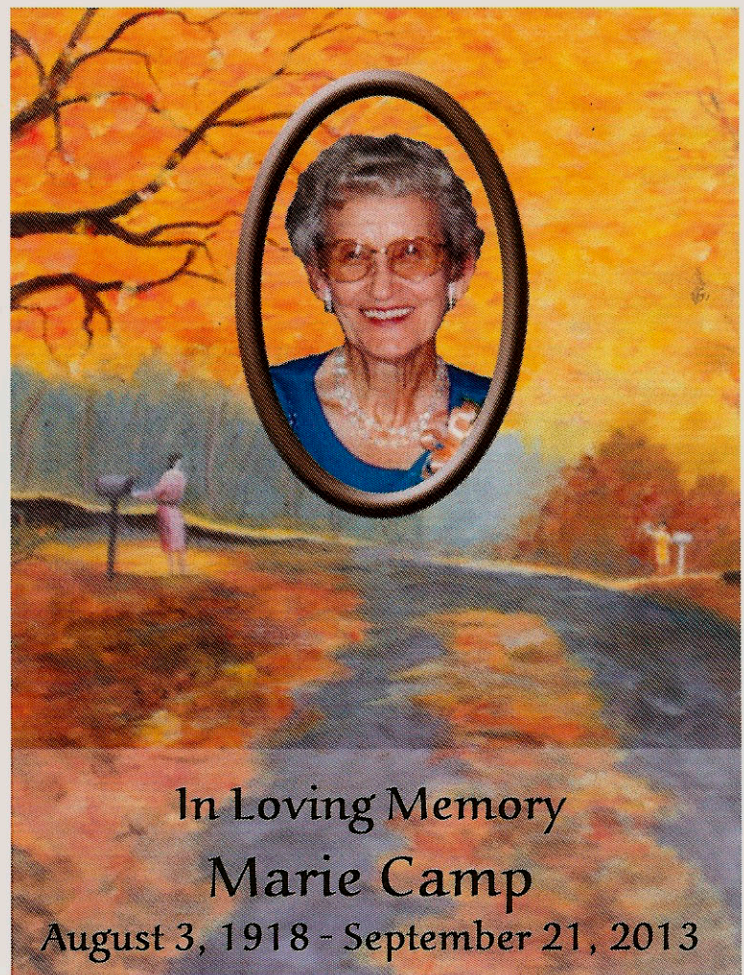

*Everything fades and passes away
Life itself is reluctant to stay
Youth, the joy and gladness of sunshine
Gone on the wind as the years fall in line.*

*Why should we weep for the days that are gone?
For the sweetness that from our life we have drawn
For the days of our childhood since passed by Must we for these forever sigh?*

*Of a mother's arms, and a father close
Of soft spring evenings spent with them both
Of brothers and sisters, both pal and friend
What love for their memories time can lend.*

*They're something to have and keep as our goal
To strengthen the fight for a sorrowing soul
So look on the sunny side of it all
And hear with gladness the last sweet call.*
